College of Business.

The most important foundation for the launch of the College, as well as the inspiration for the naming rights gift, was its unique vision to help business become stewards of society with the goal of improving the quality of life on earth. The commitment to stewardship intentionally focuses business on protecting and caring for society. The Association for the Advancement of Schools of Business (AACSB) created a collective vision for business schools that validates the Anderson College's aspirational vision.

In addition to ensuring our students master the basic “toolbox” skills of the various functional disciplines in business, students within the Anderson College will learn new concepts, models and theories that connect all disciplines. Business decision-making under a stewardship paradigm appropriately considers all the quantitative, qualitative, short and long-term factors required to construct a systems perspective in our graduates. As such, the Anderson College seeks to integrate knowledge across disciplines into a holistic understanding of the stewardship role business will serve in the future. A high priority for the College is to embrace regenerative development, an evolved paradigm that goes beyond traditional notions of sustainability.
