University College London, UCL School of Management Faculty Position In Marketing

Description

The Marketing and Analytics Group at the UCL School of Management (University College London) invites applications for tenure-track positions in Marketing with an anticipated start date 1st September 2018.

Successful candidates will demonstrate ability or potential for high-quality research, with a focus on quantitative marketing. All candidates should have a doctoral degree in marketing or a related discipline (e.g. economics, statistics, or computer science) by 1st September 2018. Candidates will also be expected to teach marketing or analytics courses in our undergraduate and/or masters programs.

The UCL School of Management is a world-leading business school based in London with a strong emphasis on research. The School's research was ranked second among UK business schools in the most recent REF (Research Excellence Framework). In 2016, the School opened its new home in Canary Wharf, in the heart of London's financial district. Salary is competitive with US business schools, and research facilities and support are excellent. The teaching load is light and designed to maximize research time.

University College London (UCL) is one of the world's foremost research universities, with a consistent ranking in the top 20 of the world's best universities. Academic staff and former students of UCL have won 29 Nobel Prizes.
