Description

Hollins University in Roanoke, Virginia invites applications for a tenure-track, experienced business faculty member. This is a full-time, open rank and business sub-field position beginning July 1, 2022. Please visit this web page to learn more about Hollins; its commitment to diversity, equity, inclusion, and justice; faculty development; the university's students; and the Roanoke Valley.

Position & Qualifications

The Department of Economics and Business strives to prepare students for leadership positions in a global society and offers a major in economics and tracks in general business, international business, finance, and a new entrepreneurship track, along with business and international business minors, and a new minor in entrepreneurship. This position carries a teaching load of three undergraduate courses per semester. Other duties include maintaining scholarly activity in the form of publications and presentations; developing curriculum; advising, mentoring, and recruiting students; participating in department and university service; and engaging with the vibrant local Roanoke Valley business community.

The successful candidate will have a strong record of innovative, student-centered teaching at the undergraduate level, evidence of scholarly accomplishment, demonstrated leadership in business curriculum development, and a strong commitment to the liberal arts and women's education. They will be able to teach introduction to business, international business, and business law and ethics, in addition to other required and elective courses in business, such as organizational behavior, marketing, e-commerce, and entrepreneurship. The ideal candidate will hold a Ph.D. in business, business economics, marketing, or organizational behavior or a D.B.A.

Hollins seeks to recruit and retain outstanding candidates who exhibit a clear commitment to diversity, equity, and inclusion and who will enhance the diversity of its faculty and staff. As such, the successful candidate will have the exciting opportunity to partner with department faculty to help lead the business curriculum and to infuse it with a newly invigorated vision that includes the cultivation of women's leadership; experiential learning and career preparedness; and diversity, equity, inclusion, and justice. In alignment with institutional and programmatic priorities, the business program is also poised to take full advantage of cross-disciplinary partnerships with academic programs across campus and in the Roanoke community to develop the next generation of successful women business leaders.
